pron Thackera's 'Early and Lale Papers' published by Tecknor & Fields.

A man who wears a dressing-gown is not neat in his person; his moral character takes, invariably, some of the slatternliness and looseness of his costume—he becomes enervated, lazy, incapable of great actions. A man in a jacket is a man. All great men wore jackets. Walter Scott wore a jacket, as everybody knows; Byren wore a jacket (not that I count a man who turns down his collars for much;) I have a picture of Napoleon in a jacket at St. Helens; Thomas Carlyle wears a jacket; Lord John Russell always mounts a jacket on striving at the Colonial Office.

jacket on arriving at the Colonial Office.

Let all literary men get jackets $\frac{1}{2}$ prefer them without this; but do not let this interfere with another man's pleasure; he may have tails, if he likes, and I, for one, will never say nay.

Like all things, however, jackets are subject to abuse; and the pertness and conceit of those fackets can not be suffily reprehended which one sees on the backs of men at watering places, with a telescope poking out of one pocket, and a yellow bandana flaunting from the other.

There is an age and figure for jackets:

There is an age and figure for jackets, those who are of a certain build should not wear them in public. Witness fat officers of the dragoon guards that one has seen bumping up and down the Steyne, at Brighton, on their great chargers, with a lace and embroidered coat, a cartridge-box, or whatever you call it, of the size of a two penny loaf, placed on the small of their backs—if their backs may be said to have a small—and two little twinkling abortions of tails pointing downward to the enormity joiling in the saddle. Officers should be occasionally measured, and after passing a certain width, should be drafted into other regiments, or allowed, nay, ordered, to wear frockcoats.

One meets with some men who look There is an age and figure for jackets;

One meets with some men who look in their frock coats perfectly sordid, sneaking and ungentlemanlike, who, if you see them dressed for an evening, have a slim, easy, almost fashionable appearance. Set these persons down as appearance. Set these persons down as fellows of poor spirit and milk-sops. Stiff, white ties and walstcoats, prim straight tails, and a gold chain, will give any man of moderate lankiness an air of factitious gentility; but if you want to understand the individual, look at him in the daytime; see him walking with his hat on. There is a great deal in the build and wearing of hats, a great deal more than at first meets the eyo. I know a man who, in a particular hat, looked so extraordinarily like a man of property, that no tradesman on the earth could refuse to give him credit.

statement to the effect, that while the New School General Assembly voted almost unanimously in favor of the report of the Joint Committee, recommending the union of the two bodies, the Old School Assembly opposed the union by a vote of 144 to 63.

In the Old School Assembly, the report of the Joint Committee was placed in the hands of a special committee of seven. This committee brought in two reports: A majority report, signed by five of its members, recommending the continuance of the Joint Committee, the publishing of its report, without any change, commending it to the consideration of the whole Church, and making provision for a further report to the next General Assembly.

The minority report recommended to the next General Assembly.

The minority report recommended certain instructions to the Joint Committee; and this report was tabled by a vote of 144 to 63,—or, which is probably more correct, by 183 to 61,—while the majority report was adopted by a vote almost unanimons. In so doing, the Assembly neither expressed approval nor disapproval of the proposed terms of Union, but only submitted them to the consideration of the Churches and Presbyteries.
